Display Wall for Facility Security Monitoring

Oak Ridge National Laboratory, TN USA

Problem:

Oakridge National Laboratory needed a high performance, 24/7 operation video wall for security monitoring. The display system needed to be shipped pre-configured because no on-site installation would be possible due to the tight security restrictions of the laboratory.

CineMassive Solution:

CineMassive Displays built a custom thermal cooling chamber behind the display wall to ensure the lowest possible operating temperatures of the displays. The entire display system was sent completely pre-cabled and a custom mount was created in order to make it easy to connect the displays to the wall without professional assistance.

Ultra High-Definition 49 MegaPixel Visualization Wall

Confidential Private Firm, USA

Problem:

A private resource discovery firm needed a high resolution visualization system in order to view maps and satellite images in real-time using ArcGIS, Google Earth, and a variety of other mapping tools. The system needed to be easy to use and function well from a distance and show incredible detail up close.

CineMassive Solution:

CineMassive Displays built an over 49 megapixel visualization wall and controller powered by a single Windows based PC, a completely unprecedented achievement. The familiar Windows environment made the wall easy enough for anyone to use and also ensured compatibility with the Arc GIS mapping software. CineMassive pre-configured the visualization system with custom interface enhancements to make it easier for the system to be used at full resolution. CineMassive Displays technicians went onsite to install the system and provide a training session.

CineMassive Displays conceptualized, built, tested, delivered and installed this ultra high definition 49 Million Pixel display wall in 2 weeks. Designed for a cutting edge resource exploration firm, the system is among the most powerful Windows-based ultra high definition visualization workstations in existence
